The Basso Who Couldn't Afford to Shave for a Salary-Serfs of the Footlights-A Super Who Had Something to Say-Super Captains.

"I am thoroughly tired out," said a portain manager one day last week; "for ers' for "The Dead Heart." I have examined scores of them, tried the voices of some and drilled others. I am hoarse from yelling and ready to drop." "But the work wasn't without its redeeming features," put in Mr. W. F. Blande, of the O'Nelll company, who had been helping to bring order out of chaos. "We saw some queer types of humanity. There was one big son of the Emeral I Isle with a deep bass voice. We accepted him for the chorus, at the same time telling him that he would have to shave his ferocious mustache.

Shave me mustache, is it-niver! " 'And why not?' I asked. " 'Shure, I'm afraid if I did I look like a tall, lank Scandinavian girl with a good stage face, but with an expression as blank as if nothing on earth interestod her. I first saw her when there was an attempt made to lure her and some companions to the West by a scoundrel who pretended to be a theatrical manager. Fortunately the plan was balked. But what I was going to say is that I have seen her on some stage or other at least once a month for seven years. I have seen her in all Mme. Modjeska's plays and in all sorts of costumes. She has trailed the robes of princesses across the beards of the Chicago Opera House. I have seen her in burlesque attire at the People's posing in hereion gated unconsciousness. She has bent over the death scenes of Clara Morris, and in statuesque vacuity and green gauge has adorned tife spectacles of Kiralfy. In all the scenes of merriment through which she has moved she has never smiled; she has listened to heartrending, pathetic appeals, and never shed a tear. Terrible crimes have been committed in her presence and she has never moved a muscle-never even looked surprised.

"She is a sphinx. She fascinates me. Sometimes I do not see her for weeks, and I am beginning to forget her, when she appears at an unexpected time and I gaze on her in wonder, heedless of every thing else in the play. If she would only show some sign of interest in what is going on around-if her indifferent eyes would only condescend to emit one gleam of intelligence, the spell would, perhaps, be broken. "But no. In the seven years that she has haunted me she has never spoken a single line. It is barely possible she does not speak English. Or she may be deaf and dumb. I make all sorts of conjectures about her, but can not rest on any. She possesses an uncanny attraction for me. Sometimes I think of writing a romance and making her the central figure. Then, perhaps, I might lift the burden of her mystery from my shoulders to those of my readers.'

And why should not the serfs of the stage have their George Kennan to champion their cause? Who ever gives them a thought-the men and wemen who are stuck here and there in the background to fill in the scene like the daubs of paint an artist uses to suggest shadowy figures? Talk of an actor merging his identity in a character; he has his real name and his assumed one identity at all. He is a cipner with the circle rubbed out.

He receives no recognition from the andience. If he is made conspicuous for a moment the gallery boy scornfully abridges the already abridged name of his humble calling, and yells "Super" at him. That is all. The real actors and sses regard him as a piece of vivifled furniture. The tragedian, if he be a heavy one, will occasionally honor him at rehearsal by vigorously swearing

He had to say: "My Lord, the carriage walts." Night after night he said it, but the audience remained cold. At last he conceived a supplementary line which he thought would stir the British breast. "My Lord," he said one night, "the carriage walts, and," advancing to the footlights and addressing the gallery, "I wish to say here that the villain who would isy his hand on a woman, except by way of kindness, is unworthy the name of a iriton and a man!"

The long-delayed applause came; that speech brought it. Though it is selden that the super abserts himself individually, he has done so collectively now and then according to theatrical annals. "Fight! Fight in carnest" cried Forcest once at a robcarasi in Albany to half a dozen supers who seemed to be timid about

This famous remedy was discovered by the eminent Dr. John Bull, of Louisville, Ky. It is intended as a scientific substitute for quicine, and is ropidly superseding the use of this drug. For any aliment that may indicate a need of quinine, Saith's Toxic Syrap may be prescribed in preference and with more satisfactory results, as it never leaves any unpleasant after effects, such as fullness of the head, headache, buzzing in the ears, deafness, uncasy or aching so mations, nausea, convulsions, paralysis, etc. It has all the good medicinal qualities of quinine and is free from its many evil tendencies. As a tonic, antiperiodic and antipyretise, it is unexcelled by any drug known to medical science. In cases of mataria, coids, influencia, incredinate temperature of the body, feverish symptoms, chilis and fever, etc., no other remedy can be used with such certainty of beneficial effects. It is a certain untidote for the evil influences of malaria and climatic changes.
